

Today Tallinn hosts a one-day preliminary session of Seedcamp, Europe's largest support programme for recently founded technology companies. The event is attended by 20 selected teams from Estonia, Sweden, Finland, Latvia, Lithuania, Russia, Slovenia, London and Paris. In the evening after intensive communication with international and local mentors the best participants will be selected to proceed to the annual final event in London called Seedcamp Week for obtaining investments to boost their business undertakings.

Today President Toomas Hendrik Ilves has welcomed the participants, stressing that Estonia is a real start-up country that enjoys unrivalled Internet freedom, and has listened to the 3-minute presentations prepared by all teams.
